Cities assume responsibility for policing cities in states of domestic turmoil such as America's King assassination riots of 1968. Their density facilitates interaction between people, government organizations, and businesses, sometimes benefiting different parties in the process, such as improving the efficiency. Even where the term is limited to larger settlements, there is no universally agreed definition of the lower boundary for their size. The term "city" has different meanings around the world and in some places the settlement can be very small. The traditional basis for a city is a human settlement of a substantial size. In a narrower sense, a city can be defined as a permanent and densely populated place with administratively defined boundaries whose members work primarily on non-agricultural tasks. Cities generally have extensive systems for housing, transportation, sanitation, utilities, land use, production of goods, and communication.
