The IAAF officially recognized the fastest times before that date as a "world best" from 1 January 2003 onwards. Before that date, the IAAF did not recognize any road running world records, though the concept of a world record was recognized by other organizations, such as the Association of Road Racing Statisticians (ARRS). A total of five men's world records and six women's world records have been officially ratified since that date

Complete results were published for the men's race, for the women's race, for men's team, and for women's team.
